Headline:

Largely dry with sunny spells. Snow showers in the east.

Today:

A frosty morning, with sunny spells and patchy cloud following throughout the day. While largely dry for western areas, scattered snow showers remain likely over the Pennines. Feeling cold, with winds easing but staying brisk. Maximum temperature 2 deg C (36 deg F).

Tonight:

A clear and largely dry night, with the odd isolated snow shower in the east. Clear skies will allow a widespread harsh frost and freezing fog to form. Very cold. Minimum temperature -9 deg C (16 deg F).

Thursday:

A frosty start with lingering fog in places. A fine and dry day following, with plenty of sunny spells. Windy along coasts and feeling cold, with further frost likely overnight. Maximum temperature 4 deg C (39 deg F).

Outlook for Friday to Sunday:

Remaining dry with sunny spells for Friday and Saturday, feeling cold with overnight frost. Becoming wet and windy Sunday with further snow and coastal gales possible.
